The European Ageing Network invites you to

EAN Summit on Digitalisation in Long-term Care

Technology is changing the way we do just about everything, and elderly care is no exception. The European Ageing Network and its members are exploring the potential of ICT and digitalisation from many perspectives: the service provider, the user and the industry partners.

The effects of the digitalisation process on life in old age can be seen in the fields of housing, care, mobility and health, as well as in the creation of social spaces. The coronavirus pandemic has accelerated the need to bring digital supplements into play in elderly care to provide a human connection and active ageing, and live up to the promise of quality care and quality life.

The EAN Working Group on Digitalisation of elderly care has identified best practices, hurdles and opportunities for the deployment of ICT. The EAN summit on digitalisation in LTC brings together members and industry partners to discuss the findings of the current state-of-play and to define the way forward.
