urn the revenue to them as higher payments for Medicaid services. This maneuver allows states to collect more in federal matching funds. But the practice has come under fire as a shady accounting move. Nursing home officials and senior advocates counter that the system is essential to the way the United States finances long-term care for many older Americans – and the ability of people like Allen to access it. The proposal, which the House Energy and Commerce Committee will consider Tuesday, is politically fraught because seniors are among the voters most likely to turn out in elections. Postpartum Care: Supporting women's health after childbirth timesofindia.indiatimes.com • 02 May, 1:11 PM • 190.508.000 visits • 10/10 performance score • 76203 reach

Current maternal health policies prioritize childbirth survival, neglecting the sustained wellbeing of mothers. Addressing this care vacuum requires mandatory postnatal reviews, funded physiotherapy, integrated mental health support, and policy reforms to ensure comprehensive, long-term care for mothers. Childbirth may mark the end of pregnancy, but for women, it is the beginning of a physically...

But as CBC's Connor Lamont reports, Health P.E.I. has no immediate plans to bring them back, due to a competing need. "That's a really necessary part of health care... to have some kind of a solution for these people that can't go home, that aren't ready to go home but don't necessarily need a long-term care bed right now, just need somewhere to recuperate for a few weeks," she said. A lot of seniors on P.E.I. are...
